Overview

- Qualitative study with 25 Irish (RoI) women traveling to the UK for abortion care
- Irish women’s perspectives are poorly understood

Research Questions:

1.) Explanations of challenges faced when travelling to the UK for abortion.

2.) Explanations of any delays in receiving care?
Methods

Research Sites: 2 British Pregnancy Advisory Service clinics in UK

Period: Feb. - June 2017

Methods: 25 semistructured in-depth interviews
   Length: 20 - 50 minutes

Eligibility:
   • adult women, citizens or permanent residents of RoI

Ethics:
   • Approvals from UCF and BPAS
Sample characteristics:

- Age: 19 – 43 yo (17 in 20s, 6 in 30s)
- GA range: 5 – 19+5.  Avg. GA: 9+6.
- Avg. parity: 1.25
- Education: secondary education to Masters degree
- Income range: zero - €42,000/yr
- 20 of 25 travelled with a companion
FINDING 1:
Waiting for treatment was the main hardship due to “environment of secrecy”.

- Maneuvering interactions with people while waiting to travel
- Challenging to go to work when feeling sick

Representative Quote:
“The hardest I suppose is just lying. I mean nobody else knows apart from my boyfriend. I’ve been sick. I’m afraid if I’m out near mother because mothers know. Parents don’t know I’m here. I put my phone on airplane mode because if my dad happens to ring, which he already has this morning, it’s a foreign dial tone. So I’m a nervous wreck”.

[R7, 26 yo, spa manager, West Ireland, GA: 7]
FINDING 2:
Women were delayed mainly due to:

a.) Financial difficulties:
“Doctors who were helping us were like ‘OK, we’ll put you onto Here2Help who might be able to put you onto another company [Abortion Support Network] that can help you pay for it’. It took a while to arrange, which is why I’m so far along. If the money was there, I would’ve been able to go over straight away”.

[R6, 22 yo, carer of chronically ill partner, Dublin, GA: 19+5]

b.) Difficulty getting the Morning After Pill (refusal):
“I was in Wexford. I went to three chemists they didn’t have the morning-after pill. One man refused me on age and weight. The fella said he had it, but he wanted me to go see their local GP first. I was mortified, I never heard that before. Eventually, I got one and it didn’t work”.

[R25, 29 yo, health care assistant, Dublin, GA: 14]
FINDING 3:
Equal method preference for surgical vs. medical abortion

- 12 of 25 preferred medical abortion
- 13 of 25 preferred surgical option
  - 7 of 13 would opt for medical abortion if they could do it in Ireland

Surgical preference:
- “Get it done and over with” [R8]
- “It’s less risk of anything happening afterwards if I fly back” [R4]
- “I’d just rather be asleep” [R17]

Medical preference:
- “Less of a big procedure” [R4]
- “I don’t like being asleep” [R19]
Concluding comments:

Irish clients experience significant hardships when traveling:

- Culture of abortion secrecy
- Financial
- Logistical: navigating new airports, cities; getting time off work and overnight childcare

2018 Referendum outcome:

- Impact unclear, since plan for medical abortion provided by GPs

Travel to continue:

- If prefer surgical care
- If GA 12 - 24 weeks
Thank you!

FINDING 3:
Culture of probing for private information about pregnancy

- Women who feel sick (nauseous) or gain weight are asked probing questions by friends, co-workers, and family about pregnancy, making it stressful.

Representative Quotes:
“I’ve had a couple of people in college comment about my stomach ‘cause obviously I got bigger, and ask me if I was pregnant. I suppose they just seen me getting a little bit heavier, so then they just asked me if I’m pregnant, and I would just say ‘no, no, no, I’m just putting on some weight’. So, it is quite upfront to be fair, I found that it was kind of cheeky of them, but at the same time, they’re curious. Oh, yeah, it’s horrible”.

[R22, 26 yo, chef, Co. Kerry, GA: 16]

“I think they [co-workers] kind of noticed I was puttin’ on a bit of weight’, and I was staying away from certain foods and I wasn’t really drinkin’. One of the girls is kind of copping on a bit. She’s like, ‘oh you’re pregnant. You’re with baby’ and all this. I was like ‘No, no, just trying to take care of myself’. So she’s kinda like ‘right…’. She’s the only one who really copped on, I think the lads just didn’t really clock it too much”.

[R18, 29 yo, creamery worker, Tipperary, GA: 9+6]
